His opinion was that we should do something to punish Germany for this organizing treachery, and so to mark our detestation of the system as to prevent it ever happening again.

Lord Kitchener's proposal was to pass a law that for 21 years no German or take up his domicile in the United Kingdom and the British empire as far ment extended, or to enter into partner ship in any British business, or become a shareholder in any British company.

Now Lord Kitchener was a man of practical mind, who was not swayed by passion, but considered only the public advantage, and he put this scheme before us with the idea that it might be proposed and adopted, not only by the perial Parliament, but perhaps also by the dominion Parliaments, where detestation of German methods is even more emphatic than it is here.

Now Parliament ought to consider this scheme; it has practical value as a meas Henry Sonneborn, a prominent Balti- ure of protection against German pene more clothing manufactured with his wife tration, and we are certain that it would
